

Policy Advocacy Disclosure

At Stanley Black & Decker, we are in business for those who make the world.

We believe that great companies like Stanley Black & Decker have a responsibility to help governments and their people develop the skills and resources needed to thrive in our changing world. That's why Stanley Black & Decker is proud to invest in government and community relations to formulate policies, programs, and partnerships that create the environment for Stanley Black & Decker, other aspirational companies, governments and other stakeholders to help those who make the world succeed. Our efforts are supported by investments amounting to approximately $3,230,000 in lobbying, including $141,834 in trade association spending (USD).

We also work with government, policy, and other stakeholders such as trade associations including the National Association of Manufacturers and The Business Roundtable.

Trade Association	Amount Spent	Portion of Dues Attributed to Federal Lobbying
National Association of Manufacturers	$162,972	$29,334
Business Roundtable	$250,000	$112,500

In addition, we work with other sectoral organizations. All expenditures are disclosed pursuant to state and federal laws where applicable. Our trade association memberships are reviewed on a regular basis to ensure our government affairs team continues to be excellent stewards of limited company resources and that organizations' policy priorities and advocacy agenda continue to align with SBD priorities. Stanley Black & Decker does not make corporate contributions to any of the following entities for lobbying or political purposes: state-level candidates, state parties, state committees, 527 groups, independent expenditures, or ballot initiatives.

In accordance with U.S. law, Stanley Black & Decker is prohibited from using corporate treasuries for contributions to federal candidates and national political parties. As stated in SBD's Code of Business Ethics, the company follows all federal and state laws regarding interactions with government officials to avoid even the appearance of improper conduct. As such, Senior managers and anyone involved in negotiating or fulfilling a government contract within the United States should, prior to making political contributions, review the Company's Political Activity Policy.
